

Self-Disclosure

Revealing personal information to a client has the potential to be misunderstood, misinterpreted, and may damage the client relationship. Extreme caution and care must be exercised if personal information is disclosed to a client. If you are unsure whether it is appropriate to disclose personal information to a client, discuss the specific situation with your supervisor.